I am an Associate Professor and Director of Research and Postgraduate Studies (Italian) within the School of Languages, Cultures and Societies at the University of Leeds. I previously served as Chair of the School's Residence Abroad Group, Director of Italian and Classics, and member of the Academic Senate. Since 2014, I am the Honorary Secretary of the Society for Italian Studies in the UK and Ireland, a strategic position of leadership embracing all facets of the Society's work.

In these roles, I work closely with colleagues in Italian and Modern Languages at my institution, as well as nationally and internationally, and in collaboration with cultural and governmental institutions, funders, embassies.

I see UCML as the united voice of the Modern Languages. If elected, I will contribute to its work in supporting, lobbying and advocating for the value of the discipline, as part of the Humanities and in our society.
